Which theology is right for you?

Off the Rack:

Off the Rack theology is mass produced and sent to theological distribution centers. It's not made for any one person but, you can choose from some distinguishing features like your preferred color, etc. It's typified by lower quality theology that simply follows the trends set by those higher up the theological fashion hierarchy.

Made to Measure:

Made to Measure (MTM) theology starts with a base pattern that is customized to better fit the individual. You will have more control over how this fits with your lifestyle than Off the Rack. This option will also be more exclusive. This is for those who are more discerning in their spiritual appearance and will allow for some luxury beliefs.

Bespoke:

This option is only for those who have achieved "elite" status in the theological world. This is the most prestigious. It's fully customized and fits the lifestyle of the individual perfectly. It also allows for unlimited luxury beliefs which can be exchanged if they become old, tiresome or out of fashion. A distinguished individual who has bespoke beliefs will have their theology exactly as they want it.

What Should You Believe to Keep Your Witness ‘Relevant’?

By Prof. K. Marxus Fulla-Bullshivitus

You may have heard of someone believing there is some form of objective truth. A standard to which we all must conform. This is an interesting idea. Thankfully with our modern times and advances in education we no longer have need for such outdated beliefs. Such values are relics of hetero-normative-patriarchal-misogynistic-xenophobic-bronze age shepherders who were ruled by superstitions and fables. None of us should think we can be certain of any one way of doing things. Who’s to say whether this way or that is “right”?

Doesn’t the Bible say, “Jesus is love”? It doesn’t seem loving to tell someone they are wrong. Isn’t the Golden Rule, “treat others as you would want to be treated”? How would you like to be treated. Wouldn’t you prefer for someone to listen to you and accept your experience as valid? Do you appreciate it when you’re questioned about every aspect of your truth? Who is someone else to say whether your experience is valid or not? If someone is unwilling to take you at your word they obviously can’t love you. They don’t respect your truth because they don’t respect you. They don’t respect you because they don’t love you. You can know with certainty they don’t love you because they would not tolerate being treated the way they are treating you at the moment. Such is the nature of religion. It’s time to progress...

If God is in fact love and wants everyone to be saved then it makes sense he’ll overlook certain offenses. Doesn’t the Bible say, “love covers a multitude of wrongs”? It also states that Heaven will include all nations. If God is inclusive and willing to overlook our wrongs how can we possibly be judgmental and presume to be exclusive? Nothing could be more unloving. Is that how you would want to be treated? Of course not!

What should you believe? It doesn’t matter. Let the culture tell you what it needs most. Jesus came so we could have freedom. God is less interested in your beliefs and more interested in YOU! God will guide you-just have faith. Meeting people where they are, being all things to all people is the best way to show them you love and accept them. Believing there is only one, narrow way is arrogant and unloving. We need to use the advanced understanding and intellect we have now to move beyond those old ways. It’s time to let religion die.-K. Marxus Fulla-Bullshivitus.

Where Do We Begin?

...to clean up the hot mess 'Churchianity, Inc. has become?

Sigh...

What should we believe to keep our witness relevant? That is the question of the day, isn't it? Where do we begin to sort through the theological clutter which has been created for the purpose of obscuring simplicity? What do I address first? It's like an episode of Hoarders but from a theological perspective. 'Churchianity, Inc.' is a complete train wreck. It's possible it may not be salvageable. Time will tell. There's also some uncertainty around the desire of its adherents to want to "clean-it-up". Why would someone undertake something when it has no value to them and is in fact antithetical to their core value system? The simple answer is-they won't. Churchianity, Inc. may have to be scuttled. There may be no other alternative.

How did we arrive at this point in time? I believe there are many factors. The work of Herbert Marcuse and Rudi Dutschke and others of their perversion is a factor. Hipster theologians (and other pseudo-intellectuals who are educated beyond their intelligence) whose core value system is the revolution, in every form, with a religious façade to give the appearance of legitimacy are a factor. The rejection of Truth is a foundational delusion upon which this charade is built. The Hegelian Dialectic is perhaps the cornerstone for this perverted structure. The Dialectic works like this: thesis, antithesis, synthesis. For example the thesis would be white; the antithesis would be black (we can't accept black and/ or white as being true therefore...) we'll create a synthesis (blending of the two, "meeting in the middle", compromise, etc.) which is gray. The point of this is to take things which are clear and to make them obscure or ambiguous all the while pretending to be a source of enlightenment. This particular brand of stupidity requires a higher level of mis-education from elitist institutions as this feeds the egos and narcissistic tendencies of those who are idiotic enough to make the mistake of believing such things as true.

What should we believe to keep our witness relevant? God refers to Himself as the "I AM". Likewise we should strip it all back to the studs-so to speak, and focus exclusively on those things which "ARE". Those principles, values, etc. which are timeless, foundational and intrinsic to everything we have and know. The sine qua non of existence. What are those principles, values, etc.? That will take a little more space than I have here at this time. Remember, this is an introduction to set the tone of what will come. Theological Couture and Churchianity Quarterly will be a public rebuke/ refutation of the foolishness of market driven theology. The Christian Industrial Complex is in desperate need of correction for their own eternal sake.

Let's begin...
